

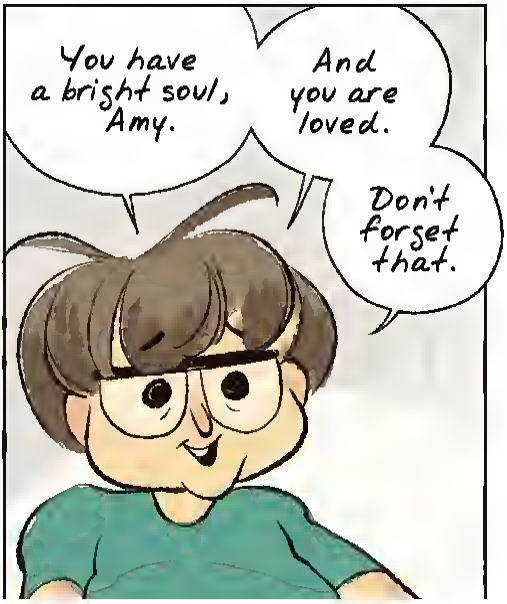
Mom, where are we?

But what about the bird?

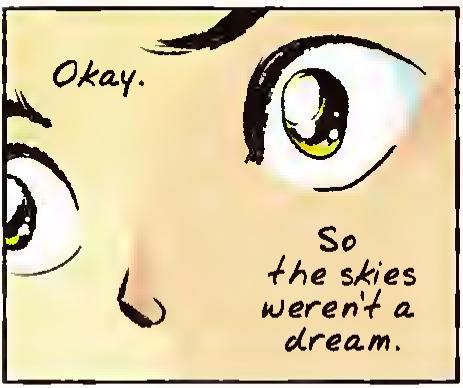


You have a bright soul, Amy.
And you are loved.
Don't forget that.

I hate goodbyes.

Soon we are at the city limits and cutting across a surreal landscape full of spinning, pinwheel-shaped towers. I'm not sure what they're for. My dad would know.

We're crossing Baltissippi Bay.



Okay.
So the skies weren't a dream.

I think I'll stay in the cabin and get some rest.
I'll bring something up for you then.
No thanks.
Not hungry.
Amy, I know things are hard right now, but you're going to love our new home.

...and there flying next to us is an enormous bird.
It's the most beautiful thing I've ever seen.
Each feather sheathes itself perfectly into the next as the wings expand and contract

Estimated travel time: fourteen hours and twenty-six minutes.
Aren't you coming down to dinner?

Eventually, darkness swallows the train, and I am lulled to sleep in the wind.

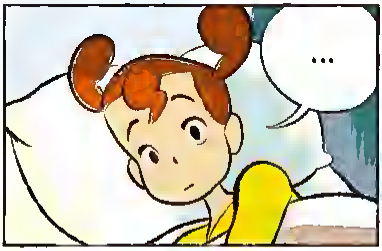
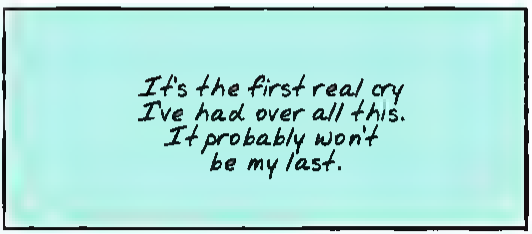
Amy, time to get up.



...

What?

We're almost there, sweetie.
Let's



It's the first real cry
I've had over all this.
It probably won't be my last.

I cry
for about an hour.

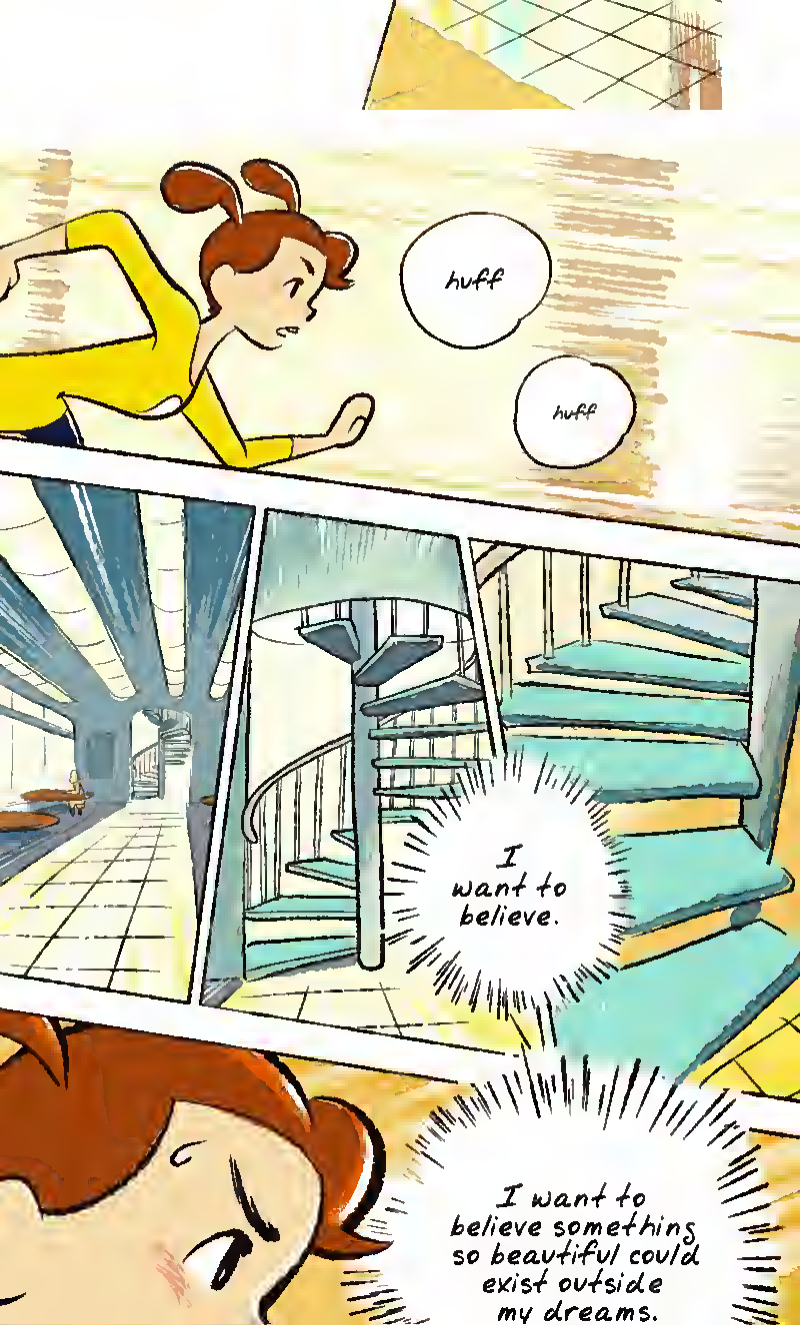
At the train station, I exchange email addresses with Pammy.
Promise me you'll write.
I will.

I have a dream where the train is flying through blue skies...

by the hum of the engine.



huff
huff
I want to believe.
I want to believe something so beautiful could exist outside my dreams.

Welcome aboard Pioneer Railways Overnight Service to Kokomo City.
Stops at Washingland Central Station, Arkolina Depot and Baltissippi Harbor.

But that didn't stop me from making friends with Pammy, even though I knew we'd have to say goodbye after only a few short weeks.

on.
Wasn't I--
Wasn't I dreaming just now?
The bird is gone, but the blue skies remain.

I still haven't seen any blue skies since coming to Earth. The smog from the city has been too thick.

Amy--
Wait, I'll go with you!
Hey!
Sorry!

As day turns to night, the city becomes illuminated with a thousand of points of white and gold light.

To get a feel for the size of the city, I pretend each light represents one person.

Trust me.

But when I am done,
I feel a lot better.
